Promoting Indian Traditional Games

Laying the edifice for holistic development of children

Indulging in play of any form of sports is vital for holistic and all-round development of children. It is a useful means of growth promoting physical activity, healthy entertainment, and character building. The traditional games and sports in India do not only foster physical and mental development of children, but also teach them core values like discipline, self confidence, team work and responsibility, dedication etc. The existing schemes of the Government of India and Sports Authority of India also lay adequate focus on the promotion of different traditional sports and indigenous games. In this light, Bhuvan Malti Teachers Training College at Motihari in Bihar, is striving to train its student teachers in a variety of traditional games so that as professional teachers, they could play a pivotal role in balancing academics with sports education at schools.

A brief about the institution

Bhuvan Malti Teachers Training College at Motihari was set up in 2012, under the aegis of Tarkeswar Narayan Agrawal Educational and Social Welfare Foundation. The underlying philosophy is to provide meaningful contribution in the area of Teacher Education and to create a pool of well trained and efficient teachers, committed and dedicated to provide better teaching at schools in Bihar. The college is affiliated to Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar Bihar University Muzaffarpur, and recognized by the National Council for Teacher Education (NCTE, Bhubaneswar). The college has adequate infrastructural and institutional facilities and a competent teaching staff. To bestow excellence in the art of teaching, the co-curricular and sports oriented programmes for the student teachers are included in their curriculum.

Rationale for promotion of Indian traditional games

The traditional games played across the country such as Kho-kho, Kabaddi, Langadi (one-leg hopping), Skipping and many more, are a mirror to the national cultural heritage and cast a deep impact on the children. Most of these games require agility and movements such as swinging of arms and jumping, which provides exercise and improves eye-hand coordination. Besides, they have always brought children together, encouraging teamwork and social interaction. It has further been proven that these culturally aligned games not only help in developing psychomotor skills, but have also been able to resolve several learning disabilities in children. They don't require expensive gears or equipment nor any uniform or specific shoes and accessories, all that is required is people to play with and space to play in. Thus, supported by a team of highly motivated social thinkers and educationists, the college has embarked on a variety of interventions with traditional games.

Specific interventions by the College

The college organizes sports events on special occasions such as 'Bal Divas' wherein student teachers participate in competitions involving a variety of traditional sports such as Kabaddi, Gilli-Danda, Cartwheel, Kit-Kit, Marbles etc. The requisite gears and materials are provided by the institution. It has also developed several audio, visual and audiovisual communication materials for dissemination of information on particular traditional games. The trained student teachers are also sent to nearby Government schools to train children and thereby promote these sports and games. It also envisages to open a few sports training centres for endorsing and supporting traditional games in the rural vicinity.

Significance and sustainability

Children need unstructured playtime and introducing conventional games to their school routine can be beneficial in several ways, preparing them to fare well in all aspects of life. It has been found that traditional Indian games are an extension of Yoga in a practical form. Like Yoga, their focus is focus on physical well-being, refining the senses, strengthening the body and balancing of breathing. All Indian games generally encourage one or more of these aspects. They contribute to children's growth, behaviour and interpersonal skills; therefore, there is a need to re-establish traditional games in children's lives. This can be achieved by training of teachers and making events and competitions around these, a regular feature across all educational institutions.

Inspiration behind the practice

The college was inspired by Indian Social Responsibility Network's calendar of 2010 which was on the theme of 'Forgotten Games'. And hence, the need to promote it!
